

MAYBE ONE DAY

I wasted your smile to nourish my strength,

I marked your body to consolidate my honor,

I screamed at the sky, the sea and the earth to prove my existence,

I have annihilated the vibrancy and freshness of the moment ...

that brief moment of lightness that will never return.

Side by side, together, we have erased what the universe, although for a short while,

gave us...

Into an abyss we are deep, drawn into dark and nefarious abysses that have sucked out our souls.

Entwined, chained, like warriors ready to attack, never tired of striking and stabbing what remains of us.

Always against each other, towards each other.

You painted me with the colors of instinct,

The one who I never wanted to be,

The one who I am not.

But did we love each other?

Who knows! One day maybe we will understand.

One day, perhaps, we will flourish again.